

Paola Di Meglio, PhD

Paola Di Meglio is a senior lecturer in cutaneous immunology at King's College London in London, UK.

Dr. Di Meglio received the European Society for Dermatological Research (EASDR)/Celgene Award and the British Society for Investigative Dermatology (BSID) Young Investigator Award in 2014. She is an associate editor for the Journal of Investigative Dermatology and a section editor in dermatology and skin immunology for Pharmacological Research. Dr Di Meglio has given more than 40 invited lectures, including at the World Congress of Dermatology in 2015 and the Montagna Symposium on the Biology of Skin in 2017.

She received her PhD in pharmacology from the University of Naples Federico II. She was a visiting postgraduate fellow in the section of immunobiology at Yale University, a research associate at St. John's Institute of Dermatology, and a senior investigator scientist at the Francis Crick Institute (formerly MRC National Institute for Medical Research [NIMR]) in Mill Hill. In March 2017, she became a lecturer in cutaneous immunology at St John's Institute of Dermatology and was promoted to senior lecturer in 2022.